

1. How can member states effectively integrate indigenous languages and knowledge into mainstream education systems without diluting their essence?
2. What specific measures can be implemented to mitigate brain drain in developing countries while respecting individuals' freedom of movement?
3. How can countries balance the need for economic diversification with the protection of indigenous rights and sustainable development?
4. What role should international organizations play in preserving indigenous cultures and languages?
5. How can we ensure that efforts to address neo-colonialism don't inadvertently create new forms of dependency?

QARMA questions:

1. How will the proposed International Agency "Indigenous People Bomboclat" ensure fair representation of diverse indigenous groups in its composition and decision-making processes?
2. What specific metrics will be used to measure the success of programs aimed at integrating indigenous knowledge into national education systems?
3. How can the working paper's recommendations on economic diversification be implemented without exacerbating existing inequalities within post-colonial nations?
4. What mechanisms will be put in place to ensure that truth and reconciliation commissions are effective and lead to tangible improvements for affected communities?
5. How will the proposed anti-racism education and training programs be designed to effectively address systemic racism rooted in colonial legacies?
6. What specific steps will be taken to ensure that the digitalization of education doesn't further marginalize indigenous communities with limited access to technology?
7. How will the working paper's recommendations on protecting indigenous cultures be balanced with the need for national unity and social cohesion in diverse societies?
8. What measures will be implemented to ensure that the proposed financial support for post-colonial nations promotes self-reliance rather than creating new forms of economic dependency?